

[InfantClock]

Abstract

A device having the appearance of a conventional clock intended to be used by new parents. The device may be used as a decoration for the infants' room. In a preferred embodiment the device has the conventional numerals from 1 to 12, but is marked predominately to indicate weeks instead of hours. The device is also useful as a photographic aid in order to date photographs and movies that the new parents make in the early stages of child development.